

Playthings of Destiny

Anita Stewart appears in this story which was written by Jane Murfin, the scenario by Anthony Paul Kelly and directed by John D. Schulze. She has in her support Herbert Rawlinson, Walter McGrail, Grace Morse, William V. Mong and the child actor Richard Hedrick.

The scenes move from northern Canada, to Jamaica, from the snowstorms of the north to the tornado of the tropics.

A school teacher is married to an Englishman whose love of solitude is crowned by his adoration for his young and beautiful wife. Misrepresentations cause her to leave him and escape the surroundings which had until now seemed like a setting for eternal happiness. She is lost in a blizzard, is rescued and begins a life of new associations. She moves to Jamaica and of course there the web of destiny enmeshes her.

Emotions, impossible to escape, play their part in the entangling fate.

The child of her marriage to Geoffrey Arnold, the Englishman, plays an important part in her destiny.
